DAY OFF

This side of the truth,
 You may not see my son,
 King of your blue eyes
 In the blinding country of youth,
 that all is undone,
 Under the unminding skies,
 Of innocence and guilt.
 Before you move to make
 One gesture of the heart or head,
 Is gathered and split
 Into the winding dark,
 Like the dust of the dead.

DAY OFF

Compassion Meditation

The human heart has the extraordinary capacity to hold and transform the sorrows of life into a great stream of compassion. Compassion is the movement of concern and kindness in response to the difficulty of any living being. Compassion arises when you allow your heart to be touched by the pain and need of another.

To cultivate compassion, let yourself sit still in a centered and quiet way. Breathe softly and feel your body, your heartbeat, the life within you. Feel how you treasure your own life, how you guard yourself in the face of sorrows. After some time, bring to mind someone close to you whom you dearly love. Picture them and feel your caring for them. Notice how you can hold them in your heart. Then let yourself be aware of their sorrows, their measure of suffering in life. Feel how your heart opens naturally, moving toward them to wish them well, to extend comfort, to share in their pain and meet it with compassion. This is the natural response of the heart. Along with this response, begin to wish them well, reciting the phrases, May you be free from pain and sorrow, may you be at peace, while holding them in your heart of compassion.
